CLEAN AMUSEMENT

No Grafters With the Parker Amusement Co

We Marshall, Mo., Democrat-News has this to say of the company which will furnish the attraction for the carnival and old country fair here next week:

The Parker Amusement Company, which has furnished the features for the big street fair, has proved itself to be a meritorious organization, and nothing but praise is heard for the various attractions presented. The Parker Pike has drawn like a magnet and up and down the amusement thoroughfares thousands have strolled nightly. As the week progressed the throng of "Pikers" increased, a testimonial that the shows were pleasing the people.

One thing to be commented upon favorably is the cleanliness of this amusement organization. It is not only one of the largest of its kind on the road, but it is likewise the cleanest. Not an off-color or suggestive attraction is to be found on the Pike. Those looking for racy shows have been disappointed, but those who appreciate wholesome amusement have found it in numerous and diversified forms.

Changes For K Of P.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 28.—Supreme Commander Boileau, in a speech at yesterday's session of the biennial convention of the Improved Order of Knights of Pythias favored extension of the membership of the order to the large cities of the country; payment of the per capita tax semi-annually instead of quarterly and the adaptation of insurance rates to those of the fraternal congress. Reports submitted indicated that the organization is in a healthy financial condition.

A High Ad

The advertising sign and tailless kite of Ennis, the manager of opera house, was erected yesterday afternoon. They certainly were an innovation in the way of advertising.

The trial of Lee Anderson at Lexington, on J. B. Haggard's farm, Elmdendorf, came to a sudden close by Henry Robinson, colored, taking the stand and confessing the crime. Anderson was immediately acquitted.

ALFALFA AND CORN SPECIAL

Stops Forty Minutes and Farmers Hear Talk.

TESTS IN THE COUNTY.

Train Proceeds Northward, Making Another Stop at Crofton.

The Alfalfa train arrived yesterday morning a few minutes late and made a stop of forty minutes.

About 300 farmers and others interested in farming were at the train. Two cars were soon filled with those who came to hear and a fourth lecturer addressed the overflow crowd at the rear end of the train.

In one car Alfalfa was discussed and in the other corn was the subject.

Interest of course centered in Alfalfa and much information was imparted.

This plant is the most prolific of any species of grass grown in this country for forage. That it has been known to produce as high as twelve tons per acre in one season can hardly be understood by a farmer who has never seen it growing. To him it seem incredible. Even on the thin rocky soil of New England one field of eight acres averaged four tons an acre one year at the first cutting. The crop was cut four times that season from that field.

The eagerness with which it is devoured by live stock of all kinds, whether as pasture, cured hay or ensilage is remarkable, but not more remarkable than its strength and flesh-giving propensities.

That the stories told of alfalfa in the West were first received coldly in the central West and Eastern States will be remembered. It is then literally true that the plant has successfully fought its way to the very shores of Maine, has done so strictly on its own merits, in spite of prejudice and opposition, and in spite also of the somewhat unusual difficulties always attending "the first stand."

Several farmers of Christian county have already given it a trial.

R. S. Wootton, LaFayette, began five years ago and now has 25 acres, from which he takes four tons of hay an acre.

Mr. J. W. Keeling, of Fairview, has in 28 acres, sown August 15, and has with him at the train samples of the growing crop 12 inches long.

Other farmers now raising it are as follows:

J. F. Garnett & Son 4 acres.
R. F. Rives, Casky, 18 acres.
R. H. Rives, Longview, 24 acres.
Noel Rivers, Longview, 12 acres.
J. R. Caule, J. J. Garrott, J. D. Clardy, W. T. Fowler and a few others are experimenting on a small scale.

Commissioner Vreeland expressed himself pleased with the reception so far. At early count the speakers have addressed 5,050 persons since they left Louisville. The crowds at Perryville and Hopkinsville were 200 and 300 respectively. Another stop was made at Crofton about 11 o'clock.

James H. Lander.

James H. Lander, whose illness was mentioned in a previous issue of The Journal, died Wednesday night at the home of his nephew, W. M. Harrison, at Salubra. Death was due to typhoid fever and kidney trouble. He had been ill only about two weeks, but for several days his case had been regarded as hopeless. Mr. Lander was about 63 years of age and was a member of the Methodist church and a veteran of the Civil War. He was a good citizen and leaves a host of friends to mourn his death. The interment occurred in the Lander burying ground, near Little River, Pembroke Journal.

The yellow fever outlook continues auspicious. The recent heavy rains at New Orleans are believed to have been a blessing, inasmuch as mosquito larvae were carried into salt water where they cannot exist.

JOHN W. TERRELL

THE PARSON'S SUBSTITUTE.

Judson's Corners was going to church. For nearly four months the roads had been almost impassable. Backsliders were many, for it meant a day's work to clean Judson mud off spring wagon and harness.

Mr. Bliss smiled a smug little smile and gently tapped his hymn book with his glasses. "It will be a good day for my spring missionary sermon," said he. "I thought so. I wonder if Amos Billings has sold his town lot yet?" And he mentally counted the tenth.

As he turned to go back into the church he became aware that some one had stepped around the east corner by the sycamore. He saw that the newcomer wanted to speak to him and he waited.

As the man approached the clergyman noted his appearance. He was a small man about his own build and poorly dressed, ragged, in fact. He was pale and clean shaven except for small side burns, an odd accompaniment of rags. His hat, having lost any trace of its original shape, was best described as slouch. It was pulled down over his eyes.

"You are Rev. Mr. Moses P. Bliss, I presume," was the very brilliant remark of the stranger.

And what was more wonderful to the astonished minister, he took off his hat and bowed like a Chessie-terrier.

"Ah—yes. What can I do for you?" he replied. He was going to add "my good man," but stopped.

"I would like to speak to you in your study for a few minutes.

"I won't keep you long. I see Hiram Jenkins' girl is the first on the hill; and he won't be here for a few minutes yet. Of course—if—"

"Oh, certainly, certainly. Come right in. I am always glad even at the eleventh hour to show a brother the way; to a better life. Just follow me."

As they walked through the empty little church with its bare wooden pews, the minister nudged his brain. "Who can he be?

His face seems familiar and I am sure I have seen him before. A lost sheep come back to the fold, I judge. Well, we'll see; we'll see."

They walked up the three steps to the pulpit, then crossed it and went through a small door at the back which led to the study. Mr. Bliss closed it carefully and motioned his visitor to a chair.

"Sit down, my friend," he said, as he went to the table and laid down his glasses and books.

"What can I do for you?"

"Just this, old duffer," said the stranger, pleasantly; "take off your clothes."

The astonished old man was reaching for his handkerchief when he heard the remarkable demand, but he dropped his arms and looked up, too amazed to speak.

"Why—I—don't—" but the words died in his throat as he suddenly saw a six shooter not twelve inches from his nose.

"No 'why's' and don'ts." Do what I tell you and hurry about it, too. I'll give you fifteen seconds for your coat and vest and as many as for your trousers. And I want your shirt and collar and tie and shoes."

Resistance never entered his head. He slipped off the coat and vest and even the collar and tie but—he stopped. A sound reached them. It was the Jenkins family entering the church. A quick hope showed in the good man's face; he'd call.

"Yell and I'll finish you."

Rev. Mr. Bliss was ready for anything now. He was fully prepared to do hand springs down the church aisle, or to climb the bell-rope, or to run fifty times around the church, all the while saying: "The devil was chasing his mother round the stump," to the tune of gun cracking after him at every corner. But he wasn't prepared for what happened.

"Now I'll give you two minutes to get the whole outfit on yourselves."

So, to the accompaniment of some more oaths, everyone of which made him jump, the clergyman obeyed. The congregation could have seen through the study door a strange sight would have met their gaze; their own beloved pastor in his underclothes, tying a black crayon on a ministerial looking person who was holding a gun recklessly near the good man's head.

Then dragging him to a corner between two book cases, the parson dumped him on a stack of old hymn books. He picked up a pad and pencil from the table and put them on the clergyman's shaking knees. "Now, I'll preach your sermon for you, and, to keep your mind off your trouble you can write: 'Mary had a little lamb' three hundred times. Every one you're shy means a hole through it."

"Don't try the window. It's nailed on the outside. Queer you didn't notice it. Now be good," he added, cheerfully.

The congregation had begun to wonder where the minister was.

Hannah Hotchkiss whispered audibly to Mrs. Hawkins. "Perhaps Jane Bliss was took bad and he couldn't leave. If he doesn't come soon I'll take the short cut by the creek and go over."

Her words were cut short by the opening of the study door. A stranger appeared. He was greeted by the usual whispering and uplifted brows. When he had carefully closed the door he stepped forward and closed his eyes a minute as if in prayer.

Then he looked around and smiled, a beautiful pious smile. In a confiding voice he said: "Dear young friends—I have noticed the absence of age here to-day—I regret very much that our dear friend and brother, Mr. Bliss, cannot be with us. Ahem—Ahem."

Echo from the study. "I have just returned from the p—, from foreign lands, and have been asked to take charge of the service for our absent brother, and to preach the annual missionary sermon." Groans from the study, followed by a loud and violent sneeze.

"From Greenland's icy Mountains" Rise and sing," said the stranger, loudly.

The Judsonites were quickly on their feet singing for dear life.

Next came the announcements. The card had been left on the open Bible. "Service this evening by the pastor. Subject—I was naked and ye clothed me." Noise from the study.

"Rise and sing: There Is a Green Hill;" Judson sang "The Green Hill" and sat down. Fat Mr. Hobbs was puffing.

The stranger went on: "A recital by the choir on Tuesday evening at the home of—" Another sneeze from the study.

"Safely Guarded." Every one stand."

"Blest if I can," wheezed Mr. Hobbs.

The hymn finished, the stranger continued: "Prayer meeting on Wednesday evening at the usual hour. There will be no collection on that evening as this is the day for the annual missionary offering, and a large amount is requested."

More sounds from the study.

"Sing," he fairly shouted, "sing number three hundred. Three hundred," he repeated to the study door.

With what breath they had left, they sang. "Thank goodness, he didn't say to stand," sighed Mr. Hobbs.

Then everything went well. The strains in the study ceased. The stranger read a chapter from Job and then announced his text: "Cast your bread upon the waters." With a beaming smile he went on: "Now, we will have the offering. Will the deacons please pass the baskets?"

Four old men moved squeakily up the aisle. They passed the basket back and forth through the pews and the clink, clink of the money brought a smile of satisfaction to the missionary's face. The deacons placed the offering at his feet and turned to go back to their seats.

From where he sat he saw the faces of the congregation suddenly change. Smiles changed to a horrified stare. They seemed to see an apparition.

He turned and beheld the pastor standing in the doorway beside him clad from head to foot in the most atrocious rags and looking scared and weak.

The stranger rose quietly and smiled. He laid his revolver on the desk and with a deft movement removed his wig with which came the sideburns. The people gasped.

"Keep your seats, my friends. No need for anyone to rise now."

And he picked up his gun. "I am sorry this has happened. No one regrets it more than I. Allow me, my dear brother." And taking the clergyman to the pulpit steps, he made him sit down. "There, that's better. Now I can see you." With another smile he went on: "Allow me to thank you kind friends, for your generous offering. I need it badly." And stooping he conveyed the contents of each basket to his pocket. "And by the way, Mr. Bliss, I want to thank you for this handsome suit. I hope you didn't catch cold. I shall now turn the rest of the service over to you. I regret that I cannot leave the cash."

Then he lightly jumped down from where he stood and swinging his gun carelessly in one hand he walked slowly and smilingly down the aisle.

"I see so many old friends here. One feels better when he has company in misery. Let me see; still weighing butter light, Joss? I told you once it wasn't honest. Better take to preaching, ha, ha! I will have my little joke. And I do believe that Nancy Bar finally landed Dan Willis. Well, Dan you deserved a better fate."

He walked a few steps down the aisle, and went on: "Say, Lem, do you remember the day you and I stole the parson's white horse and sold him and split even? And Deacon Greenfield, didn't you get next? Now, I remember you, did and we gave you ten dollars to forget it. My! Those were good old times. Well, I must be going. Hiram, I'll borrow your sorrel mare as far as Summerville, station. I'll just have time to make the noon train."—Olive Roberts Barton, in Farm and Ranch.

EFFECT OF AGE PENSIONS.

Subject Is One Which Is Commanding Attention—Many Countries Legislate.

Whatever opinion one may hold as to the economic effect of the various forms of old-age pensions which are now in operation in the world, whether voluntary or part of our governmental systems, the subject is one which is commanding an increasing attention at the hands of legislators and students of social science. The association of the subject with the extreme programmes of socialism has tended to divert the interest of many who would otherwise give the problem the study which its importance deserves, though it is a singular fact that the present German law of compulsory insurance, which is the basis of the old-age pension in that country, was enacted through the influence of Bismarck, who hoped thus to forestall the socialists to check the spread of that party, says the Philadelphia Ledger.

Many of the countries of Europe have legislated in this direction, and the pensions take varied forms, being limited in some cases to special classes of wage-earners, such as miners and the like. In these instances the state has assumed a responsibility in the premises by regulating the voluntary insurance associations of the workers, by compelling payments to such funds or by giving its guarantee and aid.

In America the subject has never been seriously considered as coming within the scope of practical or desirable legislation. The nearest approach to governmental old age pensions is the retirement on part pay of certain officers who have given their lives to the public service, but the extension of the system to the general civil service has always been promptly negatived whenever seriously proposed. On the other hand, the system has been applied to a larger extent than is generally appreciated by railway and other large corporations. To these must be added the vast array of voluntary beneficial, friendly and insurance schemes by which the people of this country are seeking to solve the problems of support in their declining years.

The tobacco growers of the white burley district have at last launched their long-talked-of association, and now the fight against the tobacco trust is on to a finish. There will never, perhaps, occur an event of more importance to the advertising business in general than the Advertising Show, which will be held in the Coliseum, Chicago, Oct. 11 to 18, 1905. This is the first venture of this kind ever attempted, and the immense success attending the annual Automobile Show, Office Appliance and Business System Shows, and others of a like nature, demonstrates beyond the question of a doubt that trade shows are immensely popular with both buyers and sellers. It is too early to give more than a general indication of the many things of interest which will occur at this show. Advertising manufacturers and sellers are an agreeable lot, and the seven days of the show will undoubtedly be the liveliest seven days advertisers have ever seen.—Ad.Sense.

Robert Hanners, a baker, twenty years of age, walked into a Chicago hospital and announced to the nurses that two years ago he swallowed a lead pencil and that it was now troubling him. He was immediately operated on for appendicitis, and a pencil, five inches in length and sharpened at one end was found imbedded in the appendix. The physicians say Hanners will recover in a short time.

Miss Belmont, who made a balloon ascension at the State Fair at Jefferson, Wis., narrowly escaped a goring by an enraged herd of Holstein cattle. She made these now in a strong wind, and was carried into a pasture filled with Holsteins. She wore red tights and the animals made a rush for her as she alighted, but fortunately help arrived in time to rescue her.

The Madisonville Graphic is supporting the entire Democratic ticket, excepting Frank Rives, the nominee for Senator. This does an injustice to some of the best men on the ticket in either county. The trouble is due to the fact that Bro. Glenn and Bill Lynch are cronies, although the latter has fallen into some mighty bad company since he left the Democratic party.

"All the world loves a lover," (probably), but every woman loves a hat, while man admires the face under it. Thursday was "ladies' day" in Hopkinsville. The dry goods clerks might as well have had "a day off." It was "opening day" with all, the millinery stores in the city and each had its throng of femininity from early morning until the closing hour at night. "Fuss and feathers," plumes and ribbons, smiles and exclamations of delight everywhere.

The feminine sex had already spent many hours consulting magazines trying to evolve from the hundreds of suggestions something that would look well over each individual face.

But all original ideas vanished when the first millinery store was visited Thursday, and when "ye lady fair" had made the rounds she was so bewildered by the many exquisite displays of fashion's ever-variable mood that, for the life of her, she couldn't determine what kind of a hat father or husband will have to pay for.

She will "do some tall studying" in the next few days. She has an ideal—everybody has. She wants to see what her ideal has selected, and whatever that may be "goes"—or something very much like it.

Women's hats, to men, are about all alike—and as to style, about as unchangeable as the laws of Medes and Persians, for the price at his home is always the same. It has been said that a young woman is harder to please in the selection of a hat than anything else in this wide, wide world—not even a bus band ever exceeded. From the day the patient-exhausted trimmer tries it on for the last time to its transfer to the cook or house-girl it never had been exactly what she wanted.

If a woman would act wisely she would listen more to the suggestions of milliner and friends than most of them generally do. We can't "see ourselves as others see us"—which, being translated, means that becoming to a blonde "looks horrid" on the pretty blonde, even though the size and contour of the face be almost identical. So don't imitate your ideal too closely, but listen to your milliner and friends have to say.

Some of the more observant men are rejoicing over the apparent passing of the broad shawl, half-umbrella ladies' hats. We don't blame them, for few ladies look well under the huge scoop affairs. They suggest snow-shoes "for summer wear" on the head.

"The style" for the season seems to leaning to the turban, so much in vogue a few years since. "Is not a real turban, but just the hat to keep the full face from looking fuller and the thin face from looking thinner. For older ladies, what might be called the half-scoop will be generally worn. One whom we believe to be au fait in such matters says that this shaped hat for more advanced ladies is the most perfect that has been brought out for years, being "neither gay nor sombre, neither loud nor too subdued." Properly trimmed it even looks "chic" and attractive over a younger face.

And then there are other shapes innumerable, colors indescribable, and "style" quite questionable.

Each one seeming to be a style of itself, without regard to harmony of color or purpose of design. But Dame Fashion has decreed that they must be worn, and worn they will be, adding to the attractiveness of some and marring the beauty of others.

Constantly one reads of Penn returning to Jordans, either to attend meetings, or on the sad occasion of the funeral of one of his children or friends. Surely then it is more fitting that he should lie at Jordans than be removed to a cemetery at Philadelphia, as some Americans advocated a year ago. It is even said that it was necessary at one time to place a guard over the grave to prevent the removal of his bones by stealth.

Finally the agitators contented themselves with erecting a large statue of him in Philadelphia, and raising a small headstone over the grave, sorely against the wishes of the Friends. Jordans has somewhat aptly been called "the Westerly Quaker." They say "Quakers" for one reads in the register of burials the names of many of the leading Friends of long ago. Isaac Pennington, whose step-daughter married Penn; Abraham Butterfield, Thomas Ewoud, Milton's greatest friend, who was also one of the first trustees of the meeting house; Joseph Rule, who was known as the "White Quaker," from his practice of always dressing in white. There was a heavy fall of snow on the day of his funeral, which gave out of the way spot for the erection of their meeting house, for if remote now, how much more remote must it have been when it was first built 200 years ago.

During the year 1637 a momentary peace was granted to the Quakers by the declaration of indulgence. It is said that William Penn's father was so irate at his son's refusal to doff his hat to any man, that on more than one occasion of his visits to London he struck his principles. Even in the reign of Charles II, he remained uncared for, whereupon he removed his own hat, observing that it was the custom at Whitehall for only one man to wear his hat at a time.

One "frivolous" Friend was fond of sport, and used to hunt in pink. His dress was denounced as being gay "unseemly and unbecoming." It is believed from a fall in a hedge (hunting field) it was with great difficulty that his friends obtained leave to bury him at the meeting house.

But during the present Jordans was built, meetings were held in a farmhouse on the top of the hill close by. The building is still standing, known as Jordan's farm. It probably took its name from

An English Mecca of American Tourists

Old Quaker Meeting House in Whose Yard William Penn Is Buried.

AMERICAN tourists who love unspoilt old-world corners will find Buckinghamshire, England, peculiarly rich in quaint and historical buildings, which have, perhaps, additional interest to Americans in the fact that they are so little known. This is somewhat strange when one considers that Buckinghamshire can certainly lay claim to be an English home town. How very few of the many thousands who visit Windsor or Burnham Beeches ever realize that scarcely six miles away is to be found the most interesting Quaker meeting house in England. For here on the crossroads two miles from the post town of Beaconsfield, the Quakers erected two of their oldest and most important meeting houses known as Jordans.

Situated in a deep hollow, and so securely hidden by its thick belt of luxuriant lime trees it is not to be wondered at that would-be visitors are frequently found vainly searching for it when at the very gates. Perhaps it was not altogether without purpose that the old Friends chose this secluded ings, or on the sad occasion of the funeral of one of his children or friends. Surely then it is more fitting that he should lie at Jordans than be removed to a cemetery at Philadelphia, as some Americans advocated a year ago. It is even said that it was necessary at one time to place a guard over the grave to prevent the removal of his bones by stealth.

out of the way spot for the erection of their meeting house, for if remote now, how much more remote must it have been when it was first built 200 years ago.

During the year 1637 a momentary peace was granted to the Quakers by the declaration of indulgence. It is said that William Penn's father was so irate at his son's refusal to doff his hat to any man, that on more than one occasion of his visits to London he struck his principles. Even in the reign of Charles II, he remained uncared for, whereupon he removed his own hat, observing that it was the custom at Whitehall for only one man to wear his hat at a time.

One "frivolous" Friend was fond of sport, and used to hunt in pink. His dress was denounced as being gay "unseemly and unbecoming." It is believed from a fall in a hedge (hunting field) it was with great difficulty that his friends obtained leave to bury him at the meeting house.

But during the present Jordans was built, meetings were held in a farmhouse on the top of the hill close by. The building is still standing, known as Jordan's farm. It probably took its name from the hill close by.

The story runs that it having been decreed that his body should not be permitted to pass through the gates, the coffin was lifted over the palings.

At the present time the meetings at Jordans are held only once a year, usually at the end of May, or as the Friends themselves like to express it, the first day of the fourth week of the fifth month. The old sect has died out, but few Friends live in the immediate neighborhood. Nevertheless the meeting is largely attended by Friends who come from afar and by members of other denominations. Nor is Jordans left alone or forgotten during the other months of the year, for the visitors' book shows how many come from all parts of the world to see the old place. Most are poor Americans of whom the caretaker has been heard to say: "Americans come from all parts of America and New York."

The beautiful surroundings of this little Quaker building cannot but impress those who visit it, especially in the spring time when the beech woods are covered with their first young green, the ground carpeted with primroses or wild violets, and the air is heavy with the scent of white violets. A home of rest and of peace is this old-world building, that for more than two centuries has stood intact, in spite of the many changes in the outer world, and the controversies that have raged within its very doors. If only the walls could speak!

And Jordans seemed to have been the rallying point of all his voyages. Perhaps the fact that he first met Gulielma Springett there in a measure accounts for his deep love of the place, though he was born in Scotland, in the mountains, but at King's Ferry, Cheshire, where he lived for some years. The farmhouse, still standing, is much the same as it was in Penn's time, though the curious old window and door of the large room where the marriage ceremony was performed is concealed from view by a newer building.

ON TRIAL.

Charged With the Murder of Henry Warren in 1895.

DEFENDED BY BELOND.

Griffin Eluded Capture Until Some Time Last Fall.

The Case of the Commonwealth against Geo. Griffin, charged with the murder of Henry Warner, was called Thursday and trial entered into, taking up all of the court's time. In the spring of 1904 Griffin shot Warner, while the latter was at work in his field near Frut Hill. Warner lingered several weeks and died from the effects of the wound. Griffin disappeared, but was captured in the fall and placed in jail here. He was indicted for wilful murder. The examination of witnesses consumed Thursday and a part of yesterday morning. John Feland, attorney for defendant, began his argument a while before noon, but owing to the illness of Jurymen M. D. Hord, court took a recess until after noon. It was expected that the case would go to the jury late yesterday afternoon.

JUDGE BLACK

Appointed County Judge In Caldwell County.

Gov. Beckham has appointed W. P. Black, of Princeton, to the office of county judge of Caldwell county to fill out the unexpired term of the late Judge W. S. Randolph, who died several days since. Judge Black is the Democratic nominee for the office at the approaching November election, and was strongly indorsed for the appointment. Judge Black is the father-in-law of Mr. James West, of this city.

WILL TRAVEL.

Mr. Jesse R. Russell Will Make First Trip Monday.

It will cause great surprise among the numerous friends of Mr. Jesse R. Russell to learn that he is to become a knight of the road. Mr. Russell has been with Mr. W. T. Cooper since he opened his grocery establishment ten years ago. He has been closely confined and he thinks it prudent to go on the road. He will travel for the old established produce house of Peter Heber, of Evansville. Everybody wishes "Jess" great success. He will make his initial trip next Monday.

Hartford Gets a Move.

Hartford will soon present the most attractive appearance of any little town in Western Kentucky. Paved streets and concrete guttering, with all store signs removed from across pavements and stile blocks taken away, our little village will present a most attractive appearance. The hand of progress is moving in our midst and evidences of its uplifting work are to be seen everywhere. The most favorable feature of the whole business is that every citizen seems to enter heartily into the push, although in some instances it amounts to almost a hardship. There can be no doubt but that Hartford is a "coming" town, and she certainly deserves all that is done for her.—Herald.

"Wife in Name Only."

"Wife in Name Only," which will be the attraction at Holland's Opera House, October 5, is a four act comedy drama from the pen of Frank Knight, dealing with both country and city life, the scenes being laid in New York City and Long Island. The attraction has met with unbounded success all along the line, the "Standing Room Only" sign being always in evidence. The cast is made up of many favorite metropolitan players, including the famous young actor, Garland Gadow, and Miss Laura Loraine, the noted singing comedienne. The company carry their own special scenery, which is said to be equalled by no organization on the road.
